MAIN ACTIVITIES OF UNAFEI (1 January 2024 – 31 December 2024)

I. ROLE AND MANDATE

The Asia and Far East Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (UNAFEI) was established in Tokyo, Japan, in 1962 pursuant to an agreement between the United Nations and the Government of Japan. Its goal is to contribute to sound social development in Asia and the Pacific region by promoting regional cooperation in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, through training and research.

UNAFEI has paid utmost attention to the priority themes identified by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice. Moreover, UNAFEI has been taking up urgent, contemporary problems in the administration of criminal justice in the region, especially problems generated by rapid socio-economic change (e.g., transnational organized crime, corruption, economic and computer crime, and offender rehabilitation and reintegration) as the main themes and topics for its training courses, seminars and research projects.

II. TRAINING

Training is the principal area and priority of the Institute's work programmes. In the international training courses and seminars, participants from different areas of the criminal justice field discuss and study pressing problems of criminal justice administration from various perspectives. They deepen their understanding, with the help of lectures and advice from the UNAFEI faculty, visiting experts and Japanese experts. This "problem-solving through an integrated approach" is one of the unique characteristics of UNAFEI programmes.

Each year, UNAFEI conducts two international training courses (four weeks' duration) and one international seminar (four weeks' duration). Approximately one hundred government officials from various overseas countries receive fellowships from the Japan International Cooperation Agency (JICA is an independent administrative institution for ODA programmes) each year to participate in all UNAFEI training programmes.

Training courses and seminars are attended by both overseas and Japanese participants. Overseas participants come not only from the Asia-Pacific region but also from the Middle and Near East, Latin America and Africa. These participants are experienced practitioners and administrators holding relatively senior positions in the criminal justice field.

By the end of 2024, UNAFEI had conducted a total of 185 international training courses and seminars. Over 6,600 criminal justice personnel representing 144 different countries and administrative regions have participated in these and other bilateral and regional seminars. UNAFEI also conducts a number of other specialized courses, both country and subject focused, in which hundreds of other participants from many countries have been involved. In their respective countries, UNAFEI alumni have been playing leading roles and hold important posts in the fields of crime prevention and the treatment of offenders, and in related organizations.

A. The 183rd International Senior Seminar

1. Theme, Duration and Participants

- “Management of Correctional Institutions in the 21st Century — With a Focus on the Nelson Mandela Rules”
- From 11 January to 6 February 2024
- 14 overseas participants from 13 jurisdictions
- 3 participants from Japan

2. Programme Overview

In order to create a safer and more just society, correctional institutions have two main responsibilities: to protect society from crime and reduce reoffending. To fulfil these responsibilities, criminal justice authorities are obliged to take necessary measures to ensure that prisoners are safely held in custody, ensure that each offender’s human rights are respected, and support their reintegration into society as law-abiding citizens. In this regard, these underpinning principles have been recognized in the international community through international standards and norms, represented by the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners (Nelson Mandela Rules), adopted by the United Nations General Assembly, which proclaim those principles and embody them in a set of guidelines. The Nelson Mandela Rules call for respectful and fair treatment of inmates, promoting humane conditions of confinement. All these are indispensable preconditions for a rehabilitative environment in prison.

The purpose of the Seminar was to consider the management of correctional institutions in the 21st century based on the International Standards and Norms, including the Nelson Mandela Rules mentioned above. The seminar participants first presented the current state of correctional institutions in their own countries and shared the challenges they faced respectively. The participants learned about measures to tackle overcrowding and achieve a rehabilitative environment through lectures and further discussed these issues in group workshops. Finally, based on the knowledge and in-depth understanding gained through the Seminar as a whole, they delivered Individual Presentations to present possible solutions to tackle the challenges in each country.

UNAFEI’s Training Courses and Seminars are designed to build a professional network that will enable the sharing of information on each country’s efforts. The seminar participants stayed at the UNAFEI dormitory for four weeks, nurturing friendship through day-to-day exchanges and building a network for life-long international cooperation.

3. The Content of the Programme

(1) Country Reports

All participants delivered presentations on the systems, practices, statistics and challenges related to correctional institutions in their respective countries. After the presentations were completed, the Programming Officer summarized the presentations and held a general discussion. The participants diligently made comments and asked questions about challenges such as overcrowding and corruption in correctional institutions, which revealed their strong interest in the main theme of the Seminar.

(2) Lectures

Seminar participants were divided into three groups to discuss the issues assigned to each group. In the discussions, the participants shared the systems and practices of their respective countries, identified challenges facing the promotion of legal aid based on the knowledge gained through the country report presentations and lectures, and discussed specific solutions to resolve those challenges. Each participant was very enthusiastic and engaged in active discussions. The main topic and outlines of each group's presentations are as follows.

Each group made presentations on the results of the discussion. In response to each presentation, participants in other groups asked insightful questions which contributed to lively presentations.

- Group 1: “Measures to Ensure the Effectiveness of International Standards and Norms”

(5) Individual Presentation

In the final stage of the seminar, each participant delivered individual presentations addressing issues in their own countries based on the knowledge and in-depth understanding gained through the seminar. Some of the presentations extended to a comparison of Japan's system or an introduction to efforts in criminal justice in Japan. It was clear that the participants were keen to apply what they had learned at the seminar and the knowledge they had gained at the places they had visited to their future practice.

(6) Self-learning Session

In order to efficiently implement the programme, a self-learning session for about one hour was set up every day. One of the self-learning programmes was e-learning materials on the Nelson Mandela Rules provided by the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC). All participants successfully passed the final online examination, and they were issued a certificate. On-demand video materials jointly produced by UNAFEI and the Japan International Cooperation Agency (JICA) were also provided to the participants to learn about the criminal justice system in Japan. When all participants finished watching the videos, UNAFEI Professors conducted a feedback session to deepen their understanding.

4. Feedback from Participants

Many positive opinions were received from the participants on the well-prepared curriculum and the comprehensive content. They commented that they have learned much from the programme. Through lectures and visits, the management of correctional institutions and the treatment of offenders in Japan attracted the participants' interest. They were especially surprised by the fact that Japan has managed facilities on an appropriate scale after the period of overcrowding, and that corruption has not spread to correctional officers. Opportunities to interact with Japanese volunteer probation officers greatly impacted the participants, acknowledging the significant contribution of Japanese citizens to the treatment of offenders and prevention of reoffending.

Based on experiences inside and outside the Seminar, including going out to various places on weekends, many participants mentioned that cities in Japan were safe and clean, and that they were impressed by punctuality and disciplined behaviour of the Japanese people.

5. Comments from the Programming Officer (Professor Miyagawa)

The principles of the international standards and norms concerning the management of correctional institutions and the treatment of offenders are very important and essential. Nevertheless, in many countries around the world, overcrowding of correctional institutions is an urgent issue, causing extreme difficulties to put these principles into practice. With regard to those circumstances, the main theme of the seminar was highly challenging.

Despite the difficulties, the participants earnestly engaged in the programme to deepen their understanding of the significance of the main theme and to learn from lectures and presentations. They had a high level of insight to objectively analyse the current situation and issues in their own countries. They were also willing to further improve the practices in accordance with the principles of the international standards and norms. In order to tackle various issues related to the management of correctional institutions, cooperation among relevant organizations with various expertise is indispensable. Therefore, I believe that it is meaningful that the International Senior Seminars invite high-level policy makers and practitioners from various fields of criminal justice. The participants spend four weeks together, sharing experiences and discussing important issues, which contributed networking among them.

I was impressed by the sincere attitude and enthusiasm of the participants and learned much about practices in the participants' countries. I hope that the knowledge gained from the programme will serve as the basis for the development of practice and contribute to the management of correctional institutions and the rehabilitation of offenders in each country.

For example, they focused on the difficulty of detection, the necessity of a trauma-informed approach and the importance of preventive measures, and they discussed various measures based on these factors. Each group presented an overview of its discussion and held a Q&A session with their fellow participants.

4. Feedback from the Participants

Most participants commented that this course was well-structured and that they learned a lot. On the other hand, there were also comments that a case study or role play could have been included. We appreciate all the feedback from the participants and will take it into consideration and try to improve our training courses.

5. Comments from the Programming Officer (Professor Nakayama)

Trafficking in persons occurs in every region of the world, and its victims suffer physical, sexual, financial, psychological and/or social damage and harm. Especially, in terms of trafficking in persons for sexual exploitation, most victims are vulnerable people such as women and children. Therefore, various measures and considerations are necessary for their protection and for the prevention of secondary victimization. The participants deepened their understanding of the importance of a trauma-informed approach through the lectures by experts. For example, participants understood that interviews of victims should be conducted in a way that prevents secondary victimization and the credibility of their statements should not be underestimated even though the statements may appear inconsistent or irrational, considering their trauma etc. In addition, participants reaffirmed the importance of collecting corroborative evidence.

Through this course, we recalled that trafficking in persons is one of the most serious global problems that impacts every country and that socio-economic factors such as poverty and immigration are root causes. At the same time, we learned that each country has various measures for detection, investigation and victim protection etc.

All participants were very active and engaged enthusiastically in the activities of the course. They learned the current situation, legal systems and good practices in other countries and around the world and discussed them. I learned a lot from the participants. For example, participants emphasized the importance of preventive measures, considering the difficulty of detection and investigation and the gravity of harm to the victims.

I hope that the knowledge and information gained in this course will be utilized in the development and enhancement of each participating country.

Most participants highly evaluated the well-structured nature of the programme, noting that they were able to learn valuable information and practical approaches through the many lectures with expertise and experiences on key issues, as well as the study visits. Particularly, many participants noted that the lecture by Ms. Natori, Managing Director, Japan Legal Support Centre (Former Director-General of the Correction Bureau), was memorable. In her lecture, she shared her experiences regarding organizational reforms triggered by incidents of abuse and corruption in correctional facilities. Many participants commented that her lecture was encouraging and inspiring, especially for those who are currently struggling with issues of corruption and abuse in their respective countries.

Moreover, through individual presentations and group discussions, participants actively shared their experiences and insights, facilitating a learning process among peers. This mutual exchange led to a deeper understanding, with many participants feeling that they were able to find specific ideas and solutions applicable to their actual work. This collaborative learning environment was a key element in enhancing the quality and value of this training course.

5. Comments from the Programming Officer (Professor KIDA)

Correctional institutions have two main responsibilities: to protect society from crime and reduce reoffending. To fulfil these responsibilities, criminal justice authorities are obliged to take necessary measures to ensure that inmates are safely held in custody, ensure that each offender’s human rights are respected, and support their reintegration into society as law-abiding citizens.

However, inmate abuse and corruption within correctional facilities undermine both of these fundamental responsibilities. The closed nature of these institutions, the asymmetry of power, issues related to organizational culture, and a lack of personnel and resources make them particularly vulnerable to such abuses and corruption. In fact, many reports of inmate abuse and corruption have emerged from correctional facilities worldwide, including in Japan.

To explore effective measures for addressing the difficult issue of preventing abuse and corruption in correctional facilities, I decided to structure this training course around two approaches: “Strengthening governance of prison administration” and “Capacity-building.”

The first approach focuses on organizational structure, including the establishment of clear organizational norms, an inspection system by third-party organizations, complaint system, legal aid and protections for whistle-blowers. However, as various social psychology experiments conducted in prison-settings by Dr. Philip Zimbardo and others demonstrate, even individuals who believe they possess strong ethical principles can fall into corrupt or abusive behaviours under specific situations or group pressures. Therefore, it is crucial to establish a structure within the organization that does not permit abuse or corruption.

On the other hand, no matter how excellent the organizational structure is, if the staff working within it lack respect and compassion for the human rights of inmates, abuse and corruption will inevitably resurface. Thus, the second approach, “Capacity-building” focuses on correctional staff and their relationships, emphasizing the importance of recruitment, personnel development, empowerment and a transparent workplace environment. Additionally, the lectures also touched on the fact that building trust and good interpersonal relationships between correctional officers and inmates is also effective in ensuring security in correctional facilities (dynamic security).

Having completed this training course, I have come to realize that in the context of correctional facilities—where the aim is to change people’s habits, values, and ways of life—the environment’s potential for true rehabilitation largely depends on the attitudes of the correctional staff. This is precisely why capacity-building is essential, and I believe that this training course itself is a crucial part of that process.

I sincerely hope that the knowledge and perspectives gained from this training course will contribute to the development of systems and operations in their respective countries, forming a foundation for building better correctional environments while respecting the human rights of inmates.

A. Annual Publications

Reports on training courses and seminars are published regularly by the Institute. Since 1971, the Institute has issued the Resource Material Series, which contains contributions by the faculty members, visiting experts and participants of UNAFEI courses and seminars. In 2024, the 117th and 118th editions of the Resource Material Series were published. Additionally, issues 173 through 175 of the UNAFEI Newsletter were published, which included brief reports on UNAFEI's training courses and seminars and other timely information. These publications are also available on UNAFEI's website at <http://www.unafei.or.jp/english>.

B. Research Studies by UNAFEI Professors

UNAFEI's main work is to conduct international training courses and seminars for personnel in crime prevention and criminal justice administration in developing countries around the world, as well as regional and bilateral support and research on crime prevention and treatment of offenders. Through long-term international training and regional and bilateral support, UNAFEI has accumulated knowledge on criminal justice in various countries, mainly in the participating countries.
